

Robi and Scott McIntire

A Volunteer's Legacy

“It was easy. It was really painless.” These are the words of volunteer Robi McIntire, speaking about the planned gift she and her husband, Scott, have made to Ronald McDonald House. As a volunteer of nearly ten years, Robi McIntire sees first hand how great the need is. All of this moved Robi to make a planned gift. “You see the need just by being here, anywhere in the House.”

Robi also recognizes that Ronald McDonald House is a good steward of its donated funds:

“I could not, in good conscience, leave money to an organization without knowing that it would be used responsibly. I know – from watching and listening during my time at the House – that our gift will be used to make a direct impact on the families who need help. My time and my money make a difference here and that feels good.”

With this first-hand knowledge – and a passion for our mission – Robi and Scott decided to make a planned gift. They had purchased an insurance policy to provide for their children. But with the kids now grown, they decided to name Ronald McDonald House as the beneficiary. For Robi and Scott, the insurance policy seemed like the right thing to do. They felt comfortable making this decision now rather than later.

Robi and Scott have worked very hard and have been fortunate to have healthy children. “And for that,” Robi says, “I strongly believe you have to give back.”

We are indebted to Robi and Scott and to all our generous planned giving donors for their enduring commitment to the future of our House and our guest families.
